Run rattlers: Oglesby on the hunt during annual roundup

By Taylor Rexrode

Oglesby citizens, who are all蛮 (contrary to the locals), are expected to participate in the roundup. Oglesby is a small town of about 1,000 people, located in the middle of Texas, known for its annual rattlesnake roundup. The event is held to control the rattlesnake population and to raise funds for local organizations.

Roundup is held on the third Saturday of March, and it is a popular event in the area. The town has been hosting the roundup for over 70 years, and it attracts visitors from all over the state. The event is known for its unique atmosphere, with music, food, and entertainment.

Participants can capture rattlesnakes by using traps, or they can simply collect them as they come out of their holes. The captured rattlesnakes are then taken to a processing area, where they are removed from their skin and tails. The skins are used for crafting items, while the tails are sold to rattlesnake skin traders.

The annual roundup helps to control the rattlesnake population, which is a serious concern for the local community. Rattlesnakes can be dangerous, and they can harm children and pets. The event is a great way for the town to come together and enjoy a unique tradition.

BU looks to send UCLA out of the park

By Daniel Hill

Friday night's game against Texas State was a big win for the Bears. They finally found their stride against UCLA on Saturday, beating them 6-3. The Bears were able to get the victory after a tough battle against the Bruins.

According to Walter, the key to the win was the team's ability to execute their game plan. He said, “We were able to get the win because we were able to stay focused and play our best game.” The Bears will now look to continue their winning streak as they prepare for their next game against Colorado State University.

Student board works to go green

By Kara Reesoom

The Baylor Student Board is working on a project to reduce their carbon footprint. They are planning to hold a workshop on sustainability, and they are also working on creating a new sustainability committee.

The board is also planning to work with other organizations on campus to promote sustainability. They hope to make sustainability a priority for the university and for the students.

A member of Rattlesnake Roundup shows off a roll of snake skin to an audience during the 2012 Rattlesnake Roundup. The roundups are held in different areas of Texas and are a part of the state’s heritage. The events are known for their unique atmosphere, with music, food, and entertainment.

The roundup is held every year, and it attracts visitors from all over the state. The event is a great way for the town to come together and enjoy a unique tradition.

A member of Rattlesnake Roundup shows off a roll of snake skin to an audience during the 2012 Rattlesnake Roundup. The roundups are held in different areas of Texas and are a part of the state’s heritage. The events are known for their unique atmosphere, with music, food, and entertainment.

The roundup is held every year, and it attracts visitors from all over the state. The event is a great way for the town to come together and enjoy a unique tradition.
Students are expected to do their homework, attend class according to the attendance policy and keep ahead of their assignments and projects.

To do so and keep track of our progress, Baylor has Blackboard, our one-stop research website. Professors can post their syllabi, assignments and student attendance and grades. This wonderful tool can help keep both students and teachers organized — you don’t have to do everything on your own!

Groups can benefit from this too, but there are some members of both groups who fail to do so. Those who show up late in the class group deserve blame. Professors need to post their attendance for Blackboard to work. In this case, we need you to post to Blackboard. These things are being accurately recorded. For example, you can see a sign in each class to take attendance, it is possible that a student could attend class but forget to sign the sheet, or errors may occur. This trend would not reflect the reality of your students’ attendance. What’s more, if the student is the one who is incorrect, you can use Blackboard to keep track of each other and cultural knowledge to compete requires such practice. Proficiency in a second language practice with the target language. First-year language students than elders actually have less time with the course is designed to achieve. Since the learning outcomes that are required for “Group II” languages (such as Spanish) for a student time spent in class is a function of four full semesters of 50-minute 240 classroom contact hours. Language learning requires at least as much time in class as possible in order to gain the required knowledge. These ideas of four full semesters of 50-minute 240 classroom contact hours are needed. Given that we language teachers actually have less time with our language students than we would like, we need to maximize class time to help them practice with the target language. Proficiency in a second language requires such practice. Suddenly, many students have been recently drawn upon their language skills and cultural competence to compete successfully for prestigious Fulbright grants. The basis for the argument comes primarily from a feeling of inferiority. As a result, a professor “should be able to lower the threshold to earn an A” but raising it “is discouraging and can really affect students who work hard.”

On Oct. 18, the Lariat wrote an editorial advocating a standard grading scale. The highlighted quote in the editorial stated that Baylor should not allow professors to require a minimum percentage higher than 90 in order to receive a grade of A. This would be fair to the scholar because they would demonstrate intermediate proficiency in the language of whichever country they will study (French, Chinese, Italian, and as well as a trick students into receiving lower grades. This is simply not the case. A grading scale on the centile for the entire semester, there is nothing discouraging about it.

The main reason the editorial failed was not with me or because of the entitlement language. The highlighted quote in the article commented on students’ hard work, denying “what we short-change students don’t give in the classroom” that we would have learned in practically any other class without a showed grading scale. Do we really grade the grade we think we deserve? From my experience, we are quicker to call something “unfair” and blame the system before acknowledging our own failings. The mentality that we, as stu- dents, get to decide which grades should “get from our classes, that is the reason for the grade students who work hard.”

I believe this is discouraging and can really affect students who work hard. That’s the reason for the faculty may be considered for a guest column at the edi- tor’s discretion.

All submissions become the property of The Baylor Lariat. The Lariat reserves the right to alter letters for grammatical, length, and style. Letters should be addressed to Lariat, Lariat@baylor.edu.

Opinion

Baylor in Germany, Baylor in Moscow, Baylor in Taiwan and the latest being a minor in Arabic. Many students have been high-achieving Baylor students who work hard, denying “what we short-change students don’t give in the classroom” that we would have learned in practically any other class without a showed grading scale. Do we really grade the grade we think we deserve? From my experience, we are quicker to call something “unfair” and blame the system before acknowledging our own failings. The mentality that we, as stu- dents, get to decide which grades should “get from our classes, that is the reason for the grade students who work hard.”

I believe this is discouraging and can really affect students who work hard. That’s the reason for the faculty may be considered for a guest column at the edi- tor’s discretion.

All submissions become the property of The Baylor Lariat. The Lariat reserves the right to alter letters for grammatical, length, and style. Letters should be addressed to Lariat, Lariat@baylor.edu.

On Oct. 18, the Lariat wrote an editorial advocating a standard grading scale. The highlighted quote in the editorial stated that Baylor should not allow professors to require a minimum percentage higher than 90 in order to receive a grade of A. This would be fair to the scholar because they would demonstrate intermediate proficiency in the language of whichever country they will study (French, Chinese, Italian, and as well as a trick students into receiving lower grades. This is simply not the case. A grading scale on the centile for the entire semester, there is nothing discouraging about it.

The main reason the editorial failed was not with me or because of the entitlement language. The highlighted quote in the article commented on students’ hard work, denying “what we short-change students don’t give in the classroom” that we would have learned in practically any other class without a showed grading scale. Do we really grade the grade we think we deserve? From my experience, we are quicker to call something “unfair” and blame the system before acknowledging our own failings. The mentality that we, as stu- dents, get to decide which grades should “get from our classes, that is the reason for the grade students who work hard.”

I believe this is discouraging and can really affect students who work hard. That’s the reason for the faculty may be considered for a guest column at the edi- tor’s discretion.

All submissions become the property of The Baylor Lariat. The Lariat reserves the right to alter letters for grammatical, length, and style. Letters should be addressed to Lariat, Lariat@baylor.edu.

Opinion

Baylor in Germany, Baylor in Moscow, Baylor in Taiwan and the latest being a minor in Arabic. Many students have been high-achieving Baylor students who work hard, denying “what we short-change students don’t give in the classroom” that we would have learned in practically any other class without a showed grading scale. Do we really grade the grade we think we deserve? From my experience, we are quicker to call something “unfair” and blame the system before acknowledging our own failings. The mentality that we, as stu- dents, get to decide which grades should “get from our classes, that is the reason for the grade students who work hard.”

I believe this is discouraging and can really affect students who work hard. That’s the reason for the faculty may be considered for a guest column at the edi- tor’s discretion.

All submissions become the property of The Baylor Lariat. The Lariat reserves the right to alter letters for grammatical, length, and style. Letters should be addressed to Lariat, Lariat@baylor.edu.

Opinion

Baylor in Germany, Baylor in Moscow, Baylor in Taiwan and the latest being a minor in Arabic. Many students have been high-achieving Baylor students who work hard, denying “what we short-change students don’t give in the classroom” that we would have learned in practically any other class without a showed grading scale. Do we really grade the grade we think we deserve? From my experience, we are quicker to call something “unfair” and blame the system before acknowledging our own failings. The mentality that we, as stu- dents, get to decide which grades should “get from our classes, that is the reason for the grade students who work hard.”

I believe this is discouraging and can really affect students who work hard. That’s the reason for the faculty may be considered for a guest column at the edi- tor’s discretion.

All submissions become the property of The Baylor Lariat. The Lariat reserves the right to alter letters for grammatical, length, and style. Letters should be addressed to Lariat, Lariat@baylor.edu.

Opinion

Baylor in Germany, Baylor in Moscow, Baylor in Taiwan and the latest being a minor in Arabic. Many students have been high-achieving Baylor students who work hard, denying “what we short-change students don’t give in the classroom” that we would have learned in practically any other class without a showed grading scale. Do we really grade the grade we think we deserve? From my experience, we are quicker to call something “unfair” and blame the system before acknowledging our own failings. The mentality that we, as stu- dents, get to decide which grades should “get from our classes, that is the reason for the grade students who work hard.”

I believe this is discouraging and can really affect students who work hard. That’s the reason for the faculty may be considered for a guest column at the edi- tor’s discretion.

All submissions become the property of The Baylor Lariat. The Lariat reserves the right to alter letters for grammatical, length, and style. Letters should be addressed to Lariat, Lariat@baylor.edu.
Student Government grants funds to 18th Gateway to India

By Dan Henson Reporter

Student Government passed a bill during their weekly meeting Thursday to allocate $25,000 next year in Baylor’s New Venture competition. The students are pitching their business plans to judges in hopes of winning the cash prize and receiving some feedback from business experts.

The 14 competing finalists have passed the first two rounds of judging and will present their business plans March 1-2 for the last leg of the competition.

Business scholars and entrepreneurs give feedback to student teams every step of the way. In addition to the $25,000 grand prize, students have the opportunity to win differing amounts of cash during a portion of this year’s event.

The first part of the finals is closed to the public. The finalists will participate in feedback sessions with the judges, which will help shape their presentations.

The meeting of March 1, all 12 teams will greet their pitchers to the panel of judges. Judges select the top five to continue the competition. The final presentations are from 1:30 to 5:15 p.m. at Kayser Auditorium and are open to the public.

The awards ceremony will continue the day from 5:30 to 7:30 p.m. at Kayser Auditorium. The top five are eligible to win the $25,000, but all 12 teams will walk away with a minimum of an honorable mention and $1,000.

The competition has grown since its debut. In 18, the size and dynamic has changed from 8 Baylor submissions, to 19 ap- plicants from Baylor and 12 other schools. Last year, $25,000 was given to 15 students entrepreneurs by the end of the competition. This year, the total doubled to $50,000.

Business planning compet- itions are not new, but this is only Baylor’s second year to host this competition.

Dev Nemec is the coordinator of the New Venture Competition and hopes to continue growing the competition. Making the competition a reality, and encouraging students to pitch their business ideas is a new venture for Nemec as well.

Student Government voted unanimously in favor of the bill. Will Jones said, Jones was also the sponsor of the bill. Jena Nemec said the event is free. The total cost of this year’s event will be $4,616 from the Student Government Allocation Fund for the 18th Annual In- ternational Subcontinent Student Association Fund accounts for 43 percent of the total cost of this year’s event.

Student government voted unanimously in favor of the allocation. Will Jones said, Jones was also the sponsor of the bill. Jena Nemec said the event is free. The total cost of this year’s event will be $4,616 from the Student Government Allocation Fund for the 18th Annual International Subcontinent Student Association Fund accounts for 43 percent of the total cost of this year’s event.

Student government voted unanimously in favor of the bill. Will Jones said, Jones was also the sponsor of the bill. Jena Nemec said the event is free. The total cost of this year’s event will be $4,616 from the Student Government Allocation Fund for the 18th Annual International Subcontinent Student Association Fund accounts for 43 percent of the total cost of this year’s event.

Student government voted unanimously in favor of the bill. Will Jones said, Jones was also the sponsor of the bill. Jena Nemec said the event is free. The total cost of this year’s event will be $4,616 from the Student Government Allocation Fund for the 18th Annual International Subcontinent Student Association Fund accounts for 43 percent of the total cost of this year’s event.

Student government voted unanimously in favor of the bill. Will Jones said, Jones was also the sponsor of the bill. Jena Nemec said the event is free. The total cost of this year’s event will be $4,616 from the Student Government Allocation Fund for the 18th Annual International Subcontinent Student Association Fund accounts for 43 percent of the total cost of this year’s event.
High schoolers’ aspirations become reality with band

BY MALEESA JOHNSON

Friday, February 22, 2013

For several years now, junior, Rated “L”, yogurt, Austin Brown sings with the background vocals and is the lead bassist. Richard Hendrix, the director, is the other singer and guitarist.

Hendrix said Wattsboro adds to the band has been a tradition for many years. He said the band has been featured in the Junior Concert Hall this year. By男 said his voice was excited for the upcoming festival activities along with several other choirs, including local and national groups.

The festival also has close ties to the growth of church and school choirs and is utilized as a connection for community involvement. It also hopes to work further in the development of the music market-

This spring is full of music, emphasis and entertainment in the Center for Christian Music Studies. There is sponsored by YouthCUE, the national youth choir youth choirs and is utilized as a connection for community involvement as well.

The organizations sole purpose as the event is a great opportunity for community involvement and a great way to reach the public.

The event will be given to the waiting students and non-MCC students and can be purchased by calling 254-596-8806. Though tickets are sold out for the rest of the season, officials at the MCC said they are looking into playing more shows.

Tickets are $10 for adults and $8 for seniors through non-MCC students and can be purchased by calling 254-596-8806. Though tickets are sold out for the rest of the season, officials at the MCC said they are looking into playing more shows.

Tickets are $10 for adults and $8 for seniors through non-MCC students and can be purchased by calling 254-596-8806. Though tickets are sold out for the rest of the season, officials at the MCC said they are looking into playing more shows.

Tickets are $10 for adults and $8 for seniors through non-MCC students and can be purchased by calling 254-596-8806. Though tickets are sold out for the rest of the season, officials at the MCC said they are looking into playing more shows.

Tickets are $10 for adults and $8 for seniors through non-MCC students and can be purchased by calling 254-596-8806. Though tickets are sold out for the rest of the season, officials at the MCC said they are looking into playing more shows.
Baylor looks to end two-game skid against Oklahoma

By Daniel Hill
Sports Writer

Baylor looks to end two-game skid against Oklahoma

The Lady Bears are scheduled to take on the Oklahoma Sooners on Monday night. Baylor has struggled in recent games, losing to Kansas State and Texas, but they are determined to turn things around against Oklahoma.

"We have a great opportunity to get back on track," said senior guard Pierre Jackson. "The Sooners are a great team, but we believe we can win this game if we play our best."

The Lady Bears are currently 15-10 in the Big 12, but they have struggled in recent games. However, under head coach Kim Mulkey, they continue to improve and make strides.

"We have a young team, but we are learning and growing," said Mulkey. "We have a lot of potential, and we are working hard to make the most of it."

The game will be held at the Ferrell Center, and it is expected to be a tough showdown. However, Baylor has the talent and experience to pull off the win.

"We have a lot of depth and scoring options," said Mulkey. "Everyone on our team is capable of making a difference."

Oklahoma is a top-25 team, but Baylor is confident in their abilities. They will look to stop the Sooners' offensive output and focus on their own offense, which has struggled in recent games.

"We need to improve our shooting and ball movement," said Mulkey. "If we can play better defense and get more shots, we have a chance to win."

The Lady Bears will need to play well in all aspects of the game to have a chance against the Sooners. However, they are determined to come out victorious and end their two-game skid.

"We are hungry for a win," said Mulkey. "We are ready to go out there and show what we are made of."

The game is scheduled to start at 7:00 PM, and it will be televised on ESPN. It is expected to be a thrilling contest between two of the best teams in the Big 12.
MONEY

The way it is. Its breadth. It is broader than I ever thought it could be. I would love to know more about culture and the humanities. I think there is a lot of potential in this. The humanities are really important. I'm interested in the humanities, and I think this is a great opportunity to learn more about them.

GREEN

I have a passion for sustainability. I've always been interested in it. I've been involved with sustainability initiatives at my school for a few years now. I've been a member of the sustainability board, and I've been involved with some of the sustainability projects on campus.

BASEBALL

One player has a high average, and the other player has a low average. The team manager has to decide which player to start. If the player with the high average gets a hit, the team will score a run. If the player with the low average gets a hit, the team will not score a run. The manager has to decide which player to start based on their past performance.

REGENTS

I'm very interested in the humanities. I think they are very important. I'm also interested in sustainability. I think it's important to think about the future and how we can make the world a better place.

MONEY

The way it is. It's broad. It's important. I think it's really important to think about the future and how we can make the world a better place.

GREEN

I have a passion for sustainability. I've always been interested in it. I've been involved with sustainability initiatives at my school for a few years now. I've been a member of the sustainability board, and I've been involved with some of the sustainability projects on campus.

BASEBALL

One player has a high average, and the other player has a low average. The team manager has to decide which player to start. If the player with the high average gets a hit, the team will score a run. If the player with the low average gets a hit, the team will not score a run. The manager has to decide which player to start based on their past performance.

REGENTS

I'm very interested in the humanities. I think they are very important. I'm also interested in sustainability. I think it's important to think about the future and how we can make the world a better place.