First offense DWI stresses bankrolls

By Marilyn French Barone

For students who are a part of the work-study program, the added element of work can provide more than a little bit of everything at her job, including "a lot of satisfaction in how they feel that they're helping to work toward their college education." Students, however, must wait three weeks after a successful plea bargain in order to have their license reinstated. In addition to the $125 reinstatement fee, students and/or their parents must pay $1,000, "if there's no way to get the charges refused or dismissed," Hunt said. "They'll also have to pay court costs and finally, and perhaps most importantly, there will pay $1,000, " Hunt said. "We've been told that in your first offense, you'll have to wait 2 years before you can drive again."

Rhode Island Gov. Lincoln Chafee has signed a gay marriage bill into law after it was signed into law this year. The new law will go into effect on Jan. 1, 2014. The law, signed by Chafee, will also allow same-sex couples to marry in Rhode Island starting next year. The new law includes a provision that would allow same-sex couples to register their partnership on the state’s vital records database. The law also adds protections for gay and lesbian students, including requiring schools to offer financial aid to students who are not able to work because of their sexuality. The law also prohibits discrimination based on sexual orientation in housing, employment, and public accommodations.

He said students have a right to be proud of themselves for their efforts, but they also have a responsibility to be aware of the consequences of their actions. "It's important to remember that, as students, we have a responsibility to be responsible for our actions," he said.

He added that the Department of Education has been working with the FAFSA application to make sure that it is user-friendly and easy to understand. "FAFSA is not just about providing financial aid, but also about helping students make informed decisions about their future," he said. "It's critical to ensure that students have all the information they need to make the right choices about their education and financial future."

Dr. Jeff Levin and his wife, Dr. Lea Steele, are both epidemiologists at Baylor. Levin is considered the “Father of the Epidemiology of Religion.”

Levin graduated from Duke University and went to University of North Carolina Chapel Hill to study epidemiology in graduate school. He said the origins of his research over religion and public health stemmed from a term paper in a class on social and cultural factors in health.

“The professor said, ‘This is interesting, you ought to write it up as an article for a journal,’ ” Levin said.

Levin said he went on to the library to search the literature again to see if anyone had done anything before. “I found more and more studies. Over the next four to five years, it would go up to 100 in the library. In 1987, I discovered over 200 of those studies, wrote it all up and ended up sending it to a medical journal. This was the first time anyone had really connected a study of religion and health together.”

Levin said he didn’t set out to find this field, but he said he is glad he has been able to contribute.

“Being able to give to students he would say to ‘follow your heart.’”

This is a decision that will affect you for the rest of your life,” Levin said. “It should be something that energizes you so even if you aren’t a doctor, you’d still want to read about the same thing. What comes in research? Pick something that has been an itch to scratch in your own life. It is a tricky path to pick something where there’s a huge infrastructure down there you have to work your heart out.”

Levin said he had a piece of advice to give to students who would say to “Follow your own heart.”

The terminal was closed immediately after the shooting. The remaining airport security members diverted traffic at Terminal B at Bush Intercontinental Airport around 3:35 p.m. and at least one shot was fired into the air. The pilots who were in the plane, came out and confronted the man, letting his re-mainder of the airport remain open.

Police say the man walked into the baggage handling area of the terminal. He then ran to the 60th anniversary of a tornado that devastated the city in 1953. The disaster killed 114 people and injured 800. Students from various Waco elementary schools gather at the Dr Pepper Museum to commemorate the anniversary. The event is sponsored by the Waco, Texas, Chamber of Commerce, the Waco Convention and Visitors Bureau and the Waco ISD.

It was no secret that Texas has been a history of pro-gun state in the United States. Texas bears some of the most lenient gun laws in the nation. At one point, the state required no training to restrict the open carry of firearms, with only exceptions such as the military. New bills have been proposed in the past decade, but both in the state House and Senate this session of 2013 seems likely to push another open carry bill to first reading. The bill is not up for debate at this time. A handful of glinting motorcycles fill the sloping parking lot, giving way to a sloping entrance. Going back to Baylor?

VISTA lets volunteers go back to college ... kind of

By Kara Rosemurgy

Serve America while still staying at Baylor: AmeriCorps VISTA members placed on Baylor’s campus have the opportunity to do just that.

AmeriCorps VISTA, Volunteers in Service to America, is a national program created to fight poverty. VISTA members serve for one year at either a nonprofit organization or a government agency. There are two available VISTA positions at Baylor, and only college graduates are eligible for the program. Benefits of the position include a modest living allowance and health care.

The AmeriCorps VISTA members placed at Baylor will work with the Office of Community Engagement and Service. The contract for both jobs is from July 2013-July 2014. Current VISTA members say their time at Baylor working with the university and the Waco community through AmeriCorps VISTA has taught them a lot.

Poverty education AmeriCorps VISTA member Chloe Toohey graduated from Centre College, a small liberal arts university in Kentucky, in May 2012 and said she wasn’t sure what her next step should be.

“I was like, ‘Hmmm, what am I doing with my life?’” she said. “I wanted to take a year off before going back to school, and I wanted to have a meaningful experience during that year.”

Today she was attracted to the VISTA position at Baylor because it incorporated many of her interests.

“Really what appealed to me was the fact that I could serve at Baylor and really make an impact on the community that I had grown fond of through four years at Baylor,” she said. “I learned to love Waco and really liked this place. So it was really a way for me to get plugging into it.”

Toohey will be taking his widened worldview to Amman, Jordan, where he will teach English as a part of the Fulbright program. He applied to the program last year but was put on the alternate list.

“So I decided to do that and then applied this year and got in,” he said. “I joke that AmeriCorps made all the difference.”

Graduates who aren’t sure of their future plans should consider applying for an AmeriCorps position, Fowler said. One of the open positions at Baylor involves working with the re-entry of ex-offenders into society and working with the Parent Resource Centers in Waco ISD, said Mary Katherine Leslie-Van Hook, project coordinator and office manager for the Office of Community Engagement and Service.
