Obama calls for airstrikes in Syria

WASHINGTON — Defying a new military threat from the Middle East, Presi- dent Barack Obama authorized U.S. air strikes Friday for the first time Wednesday night, along with expanded troops in Iraq as part of a "steady, re- lentless" effort to root out Islamic State extremists and their spreading regional threat.

"We will hunt down terrorists who threaten our country, wherever they are." Obama declared in a prime-time address to the nation from the White House. "This is a core tenet of my presidency: If you threaten America, we will find you and we will hunt you down."

Obama announced that he was dis-patching nearly 500 more U.S. troops to advise and assist Iraqi security forces, as well as conduct intelligence and recon-naissance flights. "This is the first such military action under this administra- tion," he said.

American forces in Iraq for the first time would use "in-country" strike options to target IS leaders, said奇异 Professor, a defense analyst. The U.S. military has not launched attacks against Islamic State members directly in Iraq, and American forces there have been limited to training and advising the Iraqi military. Obama said he was also extending the strike campaign to Syria, where the chaos of an intractable civil war has given the Islamic State militants' territorial ambitions a boost.

While in office, he has steadfastly sought political prominence in part because of his early opposition to the Iraq war. While in office, he has modified a "down the middle" strategy in the Middle East and avoid new wars — particularly in water-light Syria, where the chaos of an intractable civil war has given the Islamic State group's territorial ambitions a boost.

Grades

Price said that CSR is especially beneficial for graduate students, as low score admissions already adjust GPA into their grading scales, which includes minuses. If students apply while at an institution that does not use a minus scale system they may have their GPA adjusted downward more than necessary for comparisons, particularly if numerical values on transcripts cannot be verified.

"It aligns us with peer institutions that graduate schools can make more direct GPA comparisons," Pullig said.

However, Pullig said it is good the policy remains optional for professors.

"An optional policy is common across many schools," he said. "The advantage of it being optional is that individual professors can apply it according to the rigor of the course. Have confidence that individual faculty members will apply the policy in an appropriate manner."

A San Antonio senior Alexander Keller said he believes the policy may be beneficial for graduates in other regards outside of law school applications.

"If you and another candidate apply for a job and you both have the same GPA but one uses the minus scale system, it can come down to that," Keller said.

Bodies

The effort to identify missing patrons near the border.

"In Texas we have a much more diverse group of people coming across the border," Baker said. "We have about 50 percent Mexican nationals, but also an increase in the number of Latin American immigrants, as well as Chinese, Africans and Middle Eastern people coming across our southern border."

The bodies have to be examined to assign biological profiles, which could take months to complete, Baker said.

"We do an assessment to see if there's any trauma that someone might have sustained during life that would give us an indication of who they were - like a broken leg or a recannulated bone," Baker said.

"We also look for determina- tion through the skeletal remains for the age, sex or stature of a person, he added.

All of the factors examined help narrow down who the person might be.

The ultimate goal for the記得s is to find out who the people were and get it together for the families of these missing people."

"We are collecting data on how the bodies are capable of being identified across all those different natures," Baker said. "My students are so willing and interested in giving of themselves to something that could benefit humanity."

football built for the future

By Jeffrey Swindoll
Special Writer

Baylor football is in its golden age. Except for the times when our team wasn’tUGIN the Big 12 or not playing in front of a sold-out crowd at McLane Stadium, there is no way players can even think about how great they are.

But the Bears were the 2014 Southwest Region’s FCS team of the year, and the move to the Big 12 is a big deal. The Bears have been an SEC team the most of the time in recent years, but they have also been in the SEC.

This has been a year of building for the future.

The Bears lead the state of Texas with 12 NFL Draft picks this year. Baylor is on the rise as they enter into the 2014 NFL Draft, and many other teams are scrambling to get more NFL Draft picks.

Baylor is a top team in the country. They have the most successful offensive line in the country.

The Bears have won 12 games in a row, and they have a good shot at winning the Big 12 championship. They have already won the Big 12 title and are now looking towards the national championship.

The Bears are playing some of the best teams in the country, and they have a good chance to win the national championship.
