'Thor: Ragnarok' strikes viewers with action, laughs, new characters

BAILEY BRAMMER Editor-in-Chief

As someone who enjoys a good superhero movie but doesn't religiously follow the Marvel Cinematic Universe's phases and characters, I was a bit worried I wouldn't be able to follow the third installment in the Thor series," Thor: Ragnarok." I was pleasantly surprised, however, to discover that my basic understanding of the Avengers was more than enough to thoroughly enjoy the storyline and humor of Marvel's newest release.

The movie begins with Thor, the god of thunder (Chris Hemsworth), trapped by a fire demon Surtur, who claims he is going to start "Ragnarok," the prophesied death and destruction of Asgard and its people. Thor defeats the monster in true, superherostyle with his all-powerful hammer, and returns home to Asgard where he finds his supposed-to-be dead brother, Loki (Tom Hiddleston), posing as his father, Odin.

The reluctantly reunited brothers seek out their real father, but not before running into a familiar face on Earth -Dr. Stephen Strange (Benedict Cumberbatch). Upon finding Odin, their father reveals that they have an older sister, Hela (Cate Blanchett), who is not only the Goddess of Death, but is also looking to claim the throne of Asgard as her own and destroy anyone who stands in her way.

The brothers' first encounter with their longlost sibling lands them both on a planet of lost things and misfits known as Sakaar, which is run by the Grandmaster (Jeff Goldblum). Thor is slated to compete against the Grandmaster's champion in a gladiator-like challenge in order to escape the planet and return to save Asgard. The champion, to Thor's delight, happens to be the Incredible Hulk (Mark Ruffalo). The two Avengers, along with Loki and a former Valkyrie also from Asgard (Tessa Thompson) team up to attempt to take down Hela and restore peace to the Nine Realms.

Although Hela's character contains a certain dark and powerful beauty, the villain lacks any real connection to the audience through her past - she has no reason for her bloodlust, other than that her father banished her for being too ambitious. Thompson's portrayal of Valkyrie, however, offers a relatable, comedic and dynamic female character that easily replaces Thor's previous love interest, Jane Foster (Natalie Portman).

Thor himself undergoes a few changes in both physical appearance and costume in this latest release, including a haircut and the loss of his precious hammer. These adjustments, however, lead the God of Thunder to recognize his true power in the face of his murderous sister. The transformations also give Thor a more human feel, which is something previous Thor and Avenger movies have been slightly lacking in.

The actors offer a break from the fighting with witty remarks and banter, particularly between Thor and Valkyrie. Their exchanges are awkward but adorable, and the Norse god's embarrassment with a new crush again adds to his humanity and relatableness.

The music often mirrors the action, with hardcore rock-and-roll punctuating intense fight scenes and battles. Despite the film's PG-13 rating, there was hardly any blood or gore, so the movie would most likely be fine for mature pre-teens.

Overall, the fast-paced development of the movie lends itself to be enjoyed by anyone, regardless of whether you've grown up reading Marvel comics or just happen to think that Hemsworth and Hiddleston are incredibly dreamy.

about to open. She said she was nervous to try landscaping because she had never done anything with plants, and said she thought she was "just a schoolteacher." McWorther said with the help of God, her husband and three children, she managed to pull it off, and ended up meeting some of her closest friends through her new job.

"That was the hardest decision I ever made," McWorther said. "I never planned to be a landscaper. And then I met miss Renae because she called me to landscape her house, and then she referred me to her friend Candace, who lives not too far away on another ranch, and we became best friends through that wonderful experience. They've been my friends ever since, and prayer partners — through life's ups and downs, I can count on them."

McWorther came across the Voss's home on a trip to Austin to visit her sister, and said she was more than willing to help the couple cultivate their new house behind the Riverside RV Park. Connie Voss said when they bought the park in 2003, they weren't all that busy, but ever since Waco has become known for the Silos and Magnolia, their business has increased.

"People go 100,000 miles out of their way on vacation just to see the Silos," Connie Voss said. "There's so much more to Waco than the Silos, and when they find out how much there is to do and see in Waco, they end up staying for days. The RV park has blessed us, and we have met so many nice people, including Early."

McWorther said her love for Baylor began at an early age, when her father would wake her and her sister up at 4 a.m. to drive from Houston to Waco to go to Baylor football games. McWorther's father, Dusty Rhodes, also attended Baylor and graduated in 1929. Along with being freshman class president, Rhodes was also a yell leader during the 1927 basketball season, when the Immortal Ten bus crash happened in Round Rock and 10 Baylor students lost their lives.

"He told me the story in my teens about how he over-partied the night before the basketball team left on their trip, and he missed his alarm," McWorther said. "Because he missed his alarm, he missed the bus, and because he missed the bus, nine of us were able to go to Baylor."

McWorther's family is full of Bears, including her husband, her oldest daughter and her son, as well as her sister, her sister's husband and their three sons. Aside from her landscaping business, McWorther also competes nationally in tennis and grew up playing five different sports and with a passion for athletics, particularly at Baylor.

"Whenever Baylor does well, I like to invite my friends to see it in case I might send a good recruit there ... that's my goal ... or to send another child who needs a Christian environment," McWorther said. "Baylor's the best place I know to do that."

university spokesperson stated that it is the school's intentions to protect the privacy of its students and they will continue to fight for the privacy of students who are not involved with this case.

"Baylor University continues to maintain our position of keeping discovery in this case focused on the claims of the plaintiffs who have sued and preventing the disclosure of non-party student records, such as confidential medical and counseling records," the statement said. "We will remain steadfast in protecting the privacy of thousands of our students who are not involved and who may have no knowledge of this legal matter. Baylor's intent with this filing is to expedite discovery in an attempt to advance the litigation process on behalf of the plaintiffs and the university. The court of appeals has authority to decide whether the records are protected from discovery."

The plaintiffs "Issues of Concern" include all matters within "Conduct code violation," "Prohibited Conduct under Title IX Policy," "Sexual Violence" and "Sexual Harassment" as well as the Pepper Hamilton investigation, the Counselor investigation and the BoR Findings of Fact.

The records being requested include any student records in the past 14 years related to "sex" or "sexual conduct generally." Baylor's filing points out that they could be required to include a student complaint from 10 years ago to a dorm employee about a roommate's sexual activity, or a student's disclosure of childhood sexual abuse to a professor.

President Linda Livingstone addressed the court case and the filing at a panel discussing Baylor's progress Thursday evening. She said this case, which she referred to as the Jane Doe 1-10 case, is raising some interesting legal questions that could impact universities across the country.

"One of the really important questions is the request from the attorneys to get information and data from health records and Title IX records of students who are not a party to the case," Livingstone said. "We feel very strongly that the privacy of our other students who are not part of the case needs to be protected and we are doing everything we can to try to do that."

The lawyer representing the 10 plaintiffs, Jim Dunnam, said the release of these documents will help show the true statistics on sexual assault at Baylor and is vital to understanding the magnitude of the problem.

"We are not seeking student identity information other than on the assailants of our clients. The Judge has already ruled that no counseling or medical records will be released," Dunnam said. "Baylor simply needs to compile some specific data from those records and in a way that protects student privacy, but that discloses the true statistics on the extent of the sexual assault at Baylor. Baylor apparently does not want this information known."

Baylor's filing claims that if these documents are released current and future Baylor students will know that they have no true expectation of confidentiality in any report of sexual assault made to counseling staff.

"The harm threatened by this order cannot be undone. Baylor was entitled to an order protecting thousands of non-party students and former students from the guaranteed annoyance and potential for great embarrassment and harm — from being confronted with FERPA notices as to these records for which Plaintiffs have no genuine need," the document states.

Baylor said in the filing that if the court does not consider the filing, or if it rules against the university, that just by asking students to allow the release of their records could cause harm to the students and could even traumatize the recipient.

sanction on Baylor in February of this year.

After a very thorough review, the SACSCOC recommendation is that the warning be lifted. Livingstone said she is cautiously optimistic that that warning will be lifted in December at their annual meeting in Dallas.

Livingstone said the external audit of the 105 recommendations by Cozen O'Connor affirming that the recommendations have been completed is important not only for Baylor to know that they have been completed, but that the report can serve as a blueprint for other campus forever," Livingstone said. "We have to continue to learn and adapt and change and we will never be done with that."

Livingstone said she met with the Big 12 Monday to update them about Baylor's progress. The Big 12 formed a task force consisting of the Chancellor of TCU, the President of Oklahoma State and the President of West Virginia, to review the work that Baylor has done to determine if Baylor has fully completed the recommendations and that the recommendations are fully embedded survivors and come to a resolution that helps bring them healing. She said for some, that means settlements, which the university has agreed to in some cases, but that some will go to trial.

Of the five active Title IX lawsuits Baylor is involved in, there are two court dates set, one set for summer 2018 and one set for early 2019. Livingstone said she expects it to take 18-24 months before all the cases are resolved.

In regards to headlines, Allison said it is one of his goals to keep the Board of Regents to hire and fire the president of the university, but after that they are committed to providing fiduciary oversight, strategic oversight and providing foresight for the university.

Allison said the board has seen a lot of progress and has made several changes to ensure the effectiveness of the board and stay true to Baylor's mission. He specifically mentioned hiring a board professional and shortening the meetings to keep focused on what's most important.

Allison said he is confident in Baylor as institutions to follow to prevent sexual assault and sexual violence on their campuses.

"It's important to remember that many of the aspects of that report are not things you check the box and are now done doing they are commitments we have to make every single day to continue to reinforce the culture that we want to prevent sexual violence and to support those that experience it whether on or off our they experienced sexual harassment or violence (72 percent) agreed Baylor "did/ would create an environment where this type of experience was safe to discuss."

Fort Worth senior Caroline Grace, who is the president of Title IX's "It's On Us" Student Advisory Council, said she believes more organizations on campus are becoming comfortable with talking about issues related to sexual harassment or violence.

"I've been working more with fraternities and sororities in this aspect and kind of bringing [awareness] into more of an interdisciplinary field, where it's not just the sexual assault group that's doing it, it's everybody as a stakeholder," Grace said. "I think that is the ideal evolution of 'It's on Us,' that everybody is participating in the discussion and not just people that normally advocate for it."

Among respondents who experienced sexual harassment, stalking, domestic violence or sexual violence, 75 percent agreed Baylor did/would "actively support them with either formal or informal resources."

A majority of respondents indicated they agreed or strongly agreed that they felt safe on or around campus from sexual harassment (76 percent) or violence (77 percent).

"While many of the responses demonstrate significant progress and provide hope for our campus community, others have shown that more assistance, training and resources are needed as part of our ongoing commitment to continuous improvement," President Linda Livingstone said in a statement.

For example, 41 percent of respondents indicated they experienced sexist gender harassment by a student and another 31 percent said they experienced the same t sustainably in Baylor's culture.

Livingstone said she hopes that by the Big 12's board meeting in February that they will reach a conclusion that affirms what Baylor has heard from other external audits.

Livingstone addressed some of the headlines regarding Title IX lawsuits and said Baylor has been through the process of resolving some suit. She said they are trying to work with the out of the news. He said the Board has learned over the past few years that they can do a lot better; he said they are continuing to improve their communication within the board and with members outside of the board.

Allison said the priorities of the Board are to restore the trust in the Board of Regents and to unify the Baylor family. He said that first and foremost, the responsibility of the Board is an institution and a family, and has faith in its mission and work.

"We are blessed with the best students in the country," Allison said. "We are here for the students and the board is here for the students. I challenge anyone who has questions about this university to come and talk to any student on this campus and see how they feel about the Baylor community that they know."

Additional Climate Survey Findings

• 30 percent of respondents said they experienced "crude gender harassment" by a student.

• 13 percent of respondents indicated they experienced "unwanted sexual attention" and 17 percent said they experienced "sexual harassment via electronic communication" by a student.

• 81 percent of respondents who indicated they experienced sexual harassment, stalking, domestic violence or sexual violence indicated they told their close friend about the incident, 54 percent told a roommate, 36 percent told a romantic partner.

• 57 percent of respondents who indicated they experienced sexual harassment or sexual violence indicated that a community leader or residence hall staff member was "very useful."

• 70 percent said Baylor University athletic department coach or staff were "not at all useful."

• 89 percent of respondents strongly disagreed or disagreed with the statement, "If a person doesn't physically resist sex, they have given consent."

• 61 percent of respondents said they strongly disagreed or disagreed with the statement, "I don't think sexual violence is a problem at Baylor University."

type of harassment by a faculty, instructor or staff member.

Cook said that over the past couple of years, recent training and educational efforts have been focused on general awareness of sexual assault and resources available to students. He said now that Baylor has the survey's results, the university will be able to target its actions further.

"One thing that we have to consider is we have 17,000 students who all have different backgrounds, different life experiences, different personalities and different interactions," Cook said. "[Baylor's] role is to continuously work to establish a safe and caring campus community. We do that through education and the services that we provide for our students."

The campus climate survey was conducted in response to Pepper Hamilton's recently implemented "105 Recommendations" for Baylor to "identify challenges in the current campus climate that affect the educational or employment environment or create barriers to reporting, and test for prevalence."

The No. 3 Lady Bears finished 2-0 in the preseason and show no signs of slowing down as they prepare to face Lamar University at 7 p.m. today at the Ferrell Center.

Both the team's defense and offense had a stellar outing against Washburn on Monday night, with the defense holding the Ichabods to just 33 points and offense lighting up the scoreboard by putting up 117 points. Even though the Lady Bears won their first two exhibition games, head coach Kim Mulkey said there is still work to be done for her young team going into the regular season and playing a talented Lamar team.

The Bears yield a veteran team consisting of four juniors and four seniors and are looking to make it to a school-record fifth straight NCAA Tournament.

Head coach Scott Drew said the postseason experience from previous years will propel the Bears to success this season.

"Having four seniors is a good thing," Drew said. "Especially coming off of postseasons the last few years where they've had games and experiences to get them better. Hopefully that will put them in a position to lead us now like the seniors the last few years have done."

Despite having a surplus of veteran leadership, the Bears will still need to find a way to replace the departures of forward Johnathan Motley and guards Ishmail Wainright and Al Freeman.

Motley, the 2017 Karl Malone Award winner for the nation's best power forward, led the Bears in scoring and rebounding with averages of 17.3 points per game and 9.9 rebounds per game during the 2016-17 season.

Senior center Jo Lual-Acuil Jr. said the toughest aspect of Motley's game to replace will be rebounding because many of the returning players are due for scoring increases.

"The biggest thing is rebounding," Lual-Acuil, Jr. said. "As far as scoring goes, I think King [McClure] is going to make a big jump, Nuni [Omot] is going to take a jump up in production, TJ [Maston], Tristan [Clark], too."

With Lual-Acuil Jr. and senior point guard Manu Lecomte returning, the likely starters will include junior guards Jake Lindsey and King McClure and senior forward Nuni Omot. Senior forward Terry Maston and freshman forward Tristan Clark add depth in the front court, but the Bears will be lacking guards this year.

Lindsey, Lecomte, McClure and freshman guard Tyson Jolly are the only guards listed on the roster, and Jolly is currently sidelined due to an undisclosed medical reason.

Sophomore guard Wendell "Chuck" Mitchell opted to transfer following the season

"We're not polished, but the season is here and we play a Lamar team that is quick -- a Lamar team that is picked to win their league," Mulkey said. "They don't have the size that we have, but they are a very good basketball team."

The Cardinals went 22-8 overall last season. Junior guard Moe Kinard led the team in scoring with 15.3 points per game. Kinard started in all 30 games Lamar played, was named Southland Conference Newcomer of the Year and earned second-team All-Southland accolades. Having 15 players on the roster, seven being upperclassmen, Lamar will have more experience over the young Lady Bears.

With just 10 players on the roster, seven of which are underclassmen, there are going to have to be players that move around to play any position they need filled.

Bear Pit ready to get rowdy for basketball season

BRANSON HARDCASTLE

Reporter

The Bear Pit Leadership Team, a student organization that helps hype up the crowd at men's and women's basketball games, is getting ready for basketball season to begin.

The Bear Pit has supported the Bears since 2005. When they first started, there was a fee to join. Now, there is no fee because the entire student section is the Bear Pit, according to Plano sophomore Parakh Jaggi, a member of the game day committee.

"The Bear Pit is the students at Baylor University. We all are the Bear Pit," Jaggi said. "The Bear Pit isn't just the leadership team. Everyone has a ticket to every men's and women's basketball game. If you are a student at Baylor University, you are a part of the Bear Pit."

The Bear Pit Leadership Team is composed of 14 members that hold positions in different categories such as events, marketing, game day and social media. The events committee coordinates events, including watch parties and away game trips. The marketing committee provides T-shirts and flyers to raise awareness for the upcoming games. The game day committee is in the stands with other students, coordinating chants and keeping the traditions of the Bear Pit alive every game.

Last year, the Bear Pit started what they hope will be a new tradition: sit in the pit. Sit in the pit is when they bring in a local "celebrity" to sit in the student section and go crazy with the students. Last year, sit in the pit featured Chip Gaines, baseball head coach Steve Rodriguez and former Baylor forward Jonathan Motley's mother. This year, they are hoping to bring in more "celebrities" and maybe even some previous men's basketball stars.

Another tradition the Bear Pit wants to keep alive is the newspaper. When students arrive at their seats, they find a newspaper on their chair. The students are supposed to keep the newspaper for when the opposing team's starters are announced. As the opposing team is being announced, the students act like they are reading the paper and yell "Who's that?" at every player announced. Then the lights go out and the hype video for Baylor comes on. As the video is playing, the students tear up the newspaper into small strips and get ready to throw it in the air. As soon as the lights come on, everyone throws

Bears face off with versatile Red Raiders

COLLIN BRYANT Sports Writer

Baylor football (1-8) is set to square off with Texas Tech (4-5) Saturday in the ninth annual Texas Farm Bureau Shootout.

The series between the Bears and Red Raiders will be played in Arlington for the seventh time and the record between the two teams is tied at 37-37-1. Last season, sophomore quarterback Zach Smith started the game, passing for 377 yards. The Bears offense racked up 600 total yards, but committed four turnovers, allowing the Red Raiders to score a 54-35 blowout victory.

With Smith still questionable for the game, freshman quarterback Charlie Brewer is slated to make his second start of the season. Last week against the Kansas Jayhawks, the freshman completed 79 percent of his passes, 23 of his 29 attempts.

In his weekly press conference, Texas Tech head coach Kliff Kingsbury said he feels the Bears coaching staff has done a great job building their young player core and that Brewer presents a stiff challenge as a versatile quarterback.

"Anytime you start as many young players as they did this season, which I'm sure was a part of their plan, you see those guys grow week in and week out," Kingsbury said. "They've done a nice job bringing those guys along. Brewer is very elusive, can extend plays. For a young player, he really takes care of the football well."

During his press conference, Kingsbury said the threat sophomore wide receiver Denzel Mims presents on the outside, due to his ability to get out in space and make people miss, is a difficult matchup for his defense.

Texas Tech is also an offensive threat in its own right. Last season in the shootout, the Red Raiders surpassed the Bears in passing with 586 yards. The Red Raiders are poised for similar production. Texas Tech senior quarterback Nik Shimonek has thrown for at least 300 yards in five games this season, two of which were in his last two games against the Oklahoma Sooners and Kansas State Wildcats.

Baylor head coach Matt Rhule said the Red Raiders are a difficult team to match up with because of their versatility.

"Offensively, they're dynamic," Rhule said. "They go fast, so they challenge you with tempo. They challenge you, they spread the field. They do everything. Coach [Kingsbury] does a great job."

Red Raider junior wide receiver Keke Coutee also poses a threat. Last year against the Bears, Coutee had a career high in receiving with 221 yards. Last week against Kansas State, he matched his career high in receptions, catching 12 passes for 189 yards. Coutee has been one of Shimonek's favorite targets, having three games of at least 150 yards receiving.

The Bears will look to players like sophomore linebacker Jordan Williams who, Rhule said, is doing a good job at commanding the defense with his aggressive play.

"We've challenged him to become more physical, and I thought he played really, really physically in that game," Rhule said. "I think the thing that he did was, when you face those offenses that are so multiple, there's so many times you have to get everyone on the same page. I thought Jordan was so calming out there. He's got everyone on the same page."

The Bears will rely on senior linebacker Taylor Young, who played a breakout game last weekend against the Jayhawks. Young, who switched to middle linebacker to replace an injured sophomore Clay Johnston, recorded 10 tackles.

Rhule said Young had a more than efficient week preparing for the upcoming game and his play showed the work he put in. "I thought it was really special during the week leading up to it and then to be able to go out in the game and play at that level," Rhule said. "Not just in terms of the production, 10 tackles, tackle for loss and a sack. Not just that but, the way he played, what it looked like on film."

The Bears look to capture a second win against Texas Tech at 11 a.m. Saturday at AT&T Stadium in Arlington.

GOING FOR SPEED Baylor men's cross country gets set to race in the Joe Piane Notre Dame Invitational on Sept. 29 at the Burke Golf Course in South Bend, Ind. Both the men's and women's teams will compete in the South Central Regional Championship at 9:15 a.m. today in College Station.

The Baylor cross country team competes in the South Central Regional Championship starting at 9:15 a.m. today in College Station.

The Bears will compete against 28 other teams from the South Central Region, including teams from Texas, Arkansas and Louisiana.

The men's team is coming off of a sixth-place finish at the Big 12 Championship, while the women finished fifth at the same event.

Sophomore Devin Meyrer earned All-Big 12 honors after placing 12th in the 8,000-meter men's race at the Big 12 Championships, but it was not enough to place the team in the top five.

Meyrer said the team was disappointed in the performance because he knows how talented the team .

"We had a lot of things not line up that day," Meyrer said. "Which is a bummer because, according to what Coach keeps telling me, this is one of the most talented teams we've had."

The men's team is ranked sixth in the South Central region, while the women come in at fourth.

The top two placing teams in the Regional Championship are awarded an automatic bid to the NCAA Championships, along with the four best individual performances. All other teams are subject to atlarge selection by the NCAA Selection Committee.

Head coach Todd Harbour said he has confidence in both teams to compete at a high level.

"I like our team and I like the shot that we have," Harbour said. "We know we're going to race hard out front. They're going to have to get after it. We have a good shot at it. We've just got to put it together."

All Big 12 performers sophomore Anna West and junior Lindsey Bradley headline the group of seven runners that will race in the 6,000-meter women's race today. Sophomore Gabby Satterlee, freshman Brooke Gilmore, freshman Sarah Antrich, sophomore Alison Andrews-Paul, freshman Madelaine Johnston and sophomore Hana Marsheck will also compete for the women's team.

Meyrer, senior Eric Anderson, freshman T.J. Sugg, senior Matt Parham, graduate student Jordan West, senior Sam Sahli, junior Sean McCullough and freshman Jeremy Meadows will compete in the 10,000-meter men's race.

Assistant coach Jon Capron said the men's team is better suited for the 10,000-meter race, so he is expecting better results than the 8,000-meter race results from the Big 12 Championship.

"We're a built a little bit more (for a 10k race)," Capron said. "I build these guys for this race. We're hoping for a better performance. The 10K course is a lot more straight forward. You don't mess around with it. It usually runs pretty true."

If either team qualifies, they will compete in the NCAA Championships on Nov. 18 in Louisville, Ky.

Students have been buzzing all week about the men's basketball team's guest appearances in random classes to gift those lucky few with free meals from Raising Cane's.

The basketball team and staff shocked four classes Monday through Thursday with a surprise entrance, and they came bearing gifts.

"I was very surprised when the basketball players brought canes into [Michael] Korpi's class," said Austin sophomore Jaelyn Galindo. "Korpi had just starting teaching and then a bunch of people just busted in the classroom and starting handing out bags of Cane's. It was amazing."

Morgan Fleming, associate director of fan engagement & graphic design for the athletics department, was the one who suggested the idea to the staff.

"My biggest intention behind this was just to get people talking and get excitement going for basketball season, so we knew this would be a unique way to get people's attention," Fleming said. "I knew students have 5000 things on their calendars so we wanted to stand out."

Fleming said another goal of hers was to find a way that the staff and players could interact with the students.

"The basketball players and staff, they're just some of the most fun and charismatic and personable coaches and players that I've worked with, and I'm not sure that they get they chance to get seen by students, for students to meet them and see their personalities," Fleming said. "I want people to see how much fun Coach [Scott] Drew is. I want to make sure everyone knows the players by name and by face and knows [head basketball] coach Drew because they're awesome and they're a lot of fun and they want you to be a part of their family."

Fleming explained that the goal was to do something just to give back to the students. The team hoped to brighten students' day and surprise them, as well as get them talking about the upcoming season.

Grapevine sophomore Taylor Wolf was certainly surprised on Monday when the team interrupted her chemistry class.

"They just walked in and we're all looking around at each other like, 'what is happening?" Wolf said. "It was surreal, the best start to my day."

Fleming said she worked with the academic performance department to find professors who were known for their support of Baylor athletics and had their syllabus set up in a way that a guest appearance from the team this week wouldn't conflict too much with their classes. The team showed up to a chemistry class, a mass communications class, an environmental science class and an art class.

The men's basketball team's season opener is at noon today at the Ferrell Center against Central Arkansas. The men enter the season ranked 24 by the Associated Press. Sports

Baylor athletics signs 22 recruits

BEN EVERETT Sports Writer

Twenty-two high school athletes from across the country signed on today to play for Baylor as a part of national signing day for basketball, baseball and softball.

Head women's basketball coach Kim Mulkey brings in the No. 1 ranked recruiting class in the country, according to ESPN.

Mulkey said the group will help keep the Lady Bears in the national spotlight for the coming years.

"I am thrilled to welcome these five talented and well-rounded young ladies to the Lady Bear basketball family," Mulkey said. "Our program is gaining elite student-athletes, but more importantly, invested parents and families, who were very involved in each of their daughters' college decision. They will continue to help us keep our program at an elite level, which gives us a lot to look forward to in the future. We are excited to welcome the Fierce Five to Baylor."

The class consists of wing Aquira DeCosta, forward NaLyssa Smith, post Queen Egbo, point guard Honesty Scott-Grayson and wing Caitlin Bickle.

DeCosta and Smith are ranked in the top 10 of espnW HoopGurlz recruiting rankings and all five players are in the top 30 with five-star ratings.

Mulkey said Smith has the chance to be one of the best players the Lady Bears have ever had.

"We've been following NaLyssa and recruiting her heavily for the last five years," Mulkey said. "NaLyssa has the ability to play and defend every position on the floor. She can certainly be one of the most impactful players we've had in our program, and keeping her instate was a high priority for me and my staff."

Head men's basketball coach Scott Drew brings in two players for his 2018 recruiting class.

Small forward Matthew Mayer is ranked No. 57 in the ESPN 100 and shooting guard Darius Allen is a four-star junior college prospect from Palm Beach State.

Palm Beach head coach Martin McCann said Allen's relationship with Baylor assistant coach Alvin Brooks contributed to his decision to play for the Bears.

"Baylor feels at home for Darius and he's created a strong relationship with Coach Brooks," McCann told the Waco Tribune-Herald. "He really enjoyed getting to know some of their players."

While Drew and his staff still have a chance to snag more recruits in the late signing period, these two will provide a foundation for the class.

Drew said Mayer will bring offensive versatility to the Bears when he arrives for his freshman year.

"Offensively, he's very talented and he continues to grow," Drew said. "He's somebody that is very versatile and can play a number of positions. He's a great student and he'll be a great representative for Baylor University."

Head baseball coach Steve Rodriguez brings in a versatile group of seven players- six of whom are Texas natives.

Braxton Ashcraft, Logan Freeman, Brooks Helmer, Ricky Martinez, Anderson Needham, Rvan Segner and Branson Wilson are all listed as right-handed pitchers, but Ashcraft, Helmer, Martinez and Wilson can all play multiple positions on defense.

Rodriguez said the coaching staff is excited to bring in the next generation of Baylor pitchers.

"We went heavy on pitching to bolster the amount of quality frontline arms that will make an immediate impact to our pitching staff," Rodriguez said. "Our program is developing a solid foundation for the future and we are very excited about the direction we are going."

Ashcraft could have played wide receiver in college, but he chose to pursue his dream of being a professional baseball player.

"In my living room, as a little kid, my dream was to be like Stephen Strasburg and Clayton Kershaw," Ashcraft told the Waco-Tribune Herald. "Those were the guys I looked up to. To see that dream in front of me is great, but to a degree it's kind of overwhelming when you think your dreams could actually come true."

The 2017 College World Series participant

Baylor softball team will add eight players from the 2018 recruiting class. Head coach Glenn Moore added five players from Texas, one from Oklahoma, one from Kansas and one from Missouri.

Moore said the group is very diverse and will be solid foundation for the team in the coming years.

"This is a very diverse class and certainly one of the largest we've ever signed," Moore said. "With a transfer and possibly a redshirt we will still have at least six incoming freshmen. We have every area covered with left-and righthanded pitching, catching, infield and outfield."

Outfielders Lindsey Gilbert, Josie Bower, Ana Watson and Casey Shell, first baseman Kendall Cross, catcher Tyler Trott and pitchers Madison Lindsey and Sidney Holman will look to replace production lost from graduated seniors.

Big 12 men's basketball looks stronger than ever

This Weekend in Sports:

BEN EVERETT

Sports Writer

With college basketball starting this week, I took a look at the Big 12 programs and where they stand heading into opening night.

1. Kansas

The Jayhawks have won 13 straight Big 12 regular season championships and show no signs of slowing down, even after graduating National Player of the Year Frank Mason. Senior point guard Devonte' Graham is the preseason pick to win Big 12 Player of the Year as he takes the reins from Mason. Mississippi State transfer guard Malik Newman looks to resurrect his college career alongside Graham while freshman power forward Billy Preston and sophomore center Udoka Azubuike will give head coach Bill Self a formidable front court.

2. West Virginia

As long as Bob Huggins is head coach, the Mountaineers will be no fun to play. His "Press Virginia" style of defense has wreaked havoc across college basketball and keeps the Mountaineers near the top of the Big 12 each year. The veteran backcourt, consisting of senior guards Jevon Carter and Daxter Miles, Jr., returns for its final year in Morgantown while junior forward Esa Ahmad will look to take a step forward after averaging 11.3 points per game as a sophomore. 3. Baylor

The AP poll voters learned their lesson last year. After not receiving a vote in the preseason poll, the Bears ended up being a mainstay in the top 10 and reached No. 1 for the first time in school history. Defensive stalwart Ish Wainright is gone, as is leading scorer Johnathan Motley, but the No. 24-ranked Bears have much of the same team returning. Senior point guard Manu Lecomte is the best three-point shooter in the conference and senior center Jo Lual-Acuil, Jr. has a chance to lead the Big 12 in blocks in back-to-back years.

4. TCU

Every coach in the Big 12 should be afraid of Jamie Dixon. In his first season as head coach of the Horned Frogs, they went 24-15 and won the NIT. Entering his second season, they were picked to finish third in the conference and narrowly missed being ranked in the AP Top 25. Jaylen Fisher will run the show after a strong freshman season and former Texas A&M transfer guard Alex Robinson will provide veteran leadership in the backcourt. Up front, senior Vladimir Brodziansky could be a dark horse candidate for Big 12 Player of the Year after averaging 14 points and six rebounds a game for the Horned Frogs in only 23 minutes per game as a junior.

5. Texas

The Longhorns head into the 2017-18 season with high expectations and lots of pressure to succeed. Texas had a highly disappointing 2016-17 campaign, going 11-22 despite being ranked No. 21 in the preseason AP poll. The Longhorns reload despite losing first round draft pick Jarrett Allen by bringing in five-star center Mohamed Bamba, who was voted Big 12 Preseason Freshman of the Year. Additionally, freshman point guard Matt Coleman and transfer power forward Dylan Osetkowski should help alleviate some of the Longhorns' major struggles (shooting and ball handling) from last season.

6. Oklahoma

Following a Final Four run in 2016, the Sooners put together a solid season in 2017 behind a group of young, talented players. The majority of the team returns, and with the addition of sharpshooting point guard and Norman native Trae Young, Oklahoma could find itself back in the NCAA Tournament. Sophomore guard Kameron McGusty and sophomore forward Kristian Doolittle will look to build off of stellar freshman seasons and rim protecter extraordinaire Khadeem Lattin returns to Norman for his senior campaign.

7. Texas Tech

The Red Raiders return four of their top six scorers from last season, including guard Keenan Evans, who shot a scorching 43 percent from 3-point range last season. Zach Smith could have gone pro, but the athletic forward decided to return for his senior season where he is picked to be first team All Big 12 in the preseason ballot. Head coach Chris Beard will look to guide Texas Tech to its second NCAA Tournament appearance in three years.

8. Kansas State

The Wildcats have been inconsistent under Bruce Weber but always seem to yield a formidable team. K-State loses Wesley Iwundu to the NBA and D.J. Johnson to graduation, but a returning backcourt of Barry Brown and Kamau Stokes will ensure the Wildcats stay competitive. Junior forward Dean Wade has averaged nine points and five rebounds a game in each of his first two seasons in Manhattan, but needs to improve if the Wildcats are to make the NCAA Tournament for a second straight season.

9. Iowa State

Monte Morris, Naz Long, Deonte Burton and Matt Thomas have all finished their Cyclone careers. Iowa State will be a completely new team this year, and that is not a good thing for Cyclone fans. Freshman point guard Lindell Wigginton is a high-level recruit, but there's not much else. That being said, the Cyclones always get a couple of upset wins, especially at Hilton Coliseum.

10. Oklahoma State

Brad Underwood bolted for Illinois, leaving Mike Boynton in charge of a team that lost Jawun Evans and Phil Forte. Jeffrey Carroll will contend for Big 12 Player of the Year and Mitchell Solomon will beast opponents on the offensive glass, but it's hard to see the Cowboys winning many games. Additionally, Oklahoma State's top assistant coach was recently arrested amid the FBI investigations ravaging college basketball.

just two seniors for the Lady Bears and is ready to take on any responsibility Mulkey asks of her.

"There are definitely times where I have to go inside or out," Cohen said. "Just depending on where she [Mulkey] wants me I will go out there and just try to fulfill the role that she asks me to fulfill."

The team plays three games in a span of five days. Entering the season with quick turnaround matchups can be difficult, especially for a young team, but Mulkey said she isn't treating it any differently.

For Mulkey, preparing for this stretch of three games is the same as getting ready for any other game during the season. However, this stretch is something that the four freshmen on the team are not used to and have not seen before and will have to play hard for several days in a short time.

"[It's] no different. The roster is going to be what it is and hopefully we will stay healthy," Mulkey said. "We will prepare a scouting report and go over everything we need to go over. The only difference is for some of the freshmen, this will be new to them. They have to play this hard for this many days."

While it may be composed of younger players, the team has shown its ability to work together to put up veteran numbers. In their final exhibition game against Washburn, the Lady Bears dominated the paint, scoring 80 points while limiting the Ichabods to just 10.

Sophomore power forward Lauren Cox played 26 minutes and scored 17 points in Monday's win. Cox was just one of seven players on the team to score in double-digits.

Cox credits this success is to the close-knit relationship the players have with one another. With the Cardinals being ranked first in the and junior guard Al Freeman graduated and decided to play his final year of eligibility at N.C. State, leaving the Bears with a depleted backcourt. Lindsey said the lack of depth means the guards will have to be in peak physical condition. "Obviously losing Chuck and Al hurts," Lindsey said. "We'll just have to do a good job taking care of our bodies and be efficient with how we expend our energy. I think we have plenty of talent." Central Arkansas brings the No. 1 scoring offense in the Southland Conference during the 2016-17 season to the Ferrell Center. Drew said UCA's strengths lie on the offensive side of the ball as the Bears play at a fast pace and are not afraid to launch 3-pointers. "They had the No. 1 rated offense [in the conference] last year," Drew said. "Top 50 pace in country, they play fast and play in transition. They shoot a lot of threes." The Baylor defense will be keen to UCA senior point guard Jordan Howard, an all-conference performer a season ago after averaging 19.5 points per game and shooting 45 percent from 3-point range. Drew said he and his staff tried to enlist Howard's brother, Markus, who wound up choosing Marquette, so Baylor holds their family with high esteem. "Jordan Howard is a returning all-conference player for them," Drew said. "He's a very good player. We recruited his brother Markus Howard, so we have a lot of respect for him and his family. The Bears stay at home for their second game, facing Texas A&M-Corpus Christi at 7 p.m. Monday at the Ferrell Center.

Southland Conference preseason rankings, the Lady Bears are going to have to keep up the fast pace and teamwork they have shown during their exhibition games.

"I think we have great team chemistry. Just from playing with each other during the summer," Cox said. "I think we really get along and we know how to play with each other."

After the matchup against Lamar, the Lady Bears will play again against Coppin State at 2 p.m. Sunday at the Ferrell Center.

the torn-up paper into the air and watches as the paper slowly floats down and covers the student section.

The Bear Pit also has chants just for the opposing players such as "boo game" where everyone boos the opposing team except for one player. When that one player gets the ball, the whole student section explodes with cheers to try to get inside the opposing team's heads.

Port Orchard, Wash., senior and game day chair Hayden Johnson said he believes these small chants and traditions help throw off the opposing teams.

"I like seeing us getting into the other team's head. It makes the other team start to make mistakes and our team feeds off of that energy," Johnson said. "I like seeing our efforts translate to success on the court which is the Bear Pit's main mission."

The Bear Pit is still working to better the student section. They know there are things that they need to improve on to make the student section even rowdier to distract the opposing teams.

Vienna, Va., sophomore Camilla Bruce said that attendance for men's and women's games need to improve in order to help the Bear Pit accomplish this feat.

"We need to get butts in seats as Hayden always says. Raising the attendance will help make it louder. Also, we need to have more awareness of games," Bruce said. "The attendance of women's games is lower compared to the attendance at men's games, so getting that attendance up as well will be great."

Sports ——

Johnson said that the student section needs to be a more cohesive unit as well, adding that there are times when the chants will be a little off because there is a delay between the students at the front and the students at the back. They will be working to improve that by asking members of the Bear Pit Leadership Team to sit in those areas to improve the cohesiveness.

With the men's and women's season officially starting on today, expect the Bear Pit to be ready and rowdy and for them to ask students to "get butts in seats."

Both the men's and women's teams play at home today. The No. 24 Bears play at noon against Central Arkansas and the No. 3 Lady Bears play at 7 p.m. against Lamar.
