depositions to focus on the actual cause of the plaintiffs’ alleged assaults. In the motion, Baylor argues that, based on questions asked during depositions, the lawsuit appears to be about whether there is "division" among members of the Board of Regents regarding operation of the university, how the regents managed the sexual assault investigation conducted by Pepper Hamilton, whether the regents accurately assessed the investigation and whether the regents made fair employment decisions after the investigation.

Time is racing toward us
Let’s get down to organization this semester

Not knowing your grades and forgetting when your tests are can be the most frustrating moments of the year. As the school year begins, now is the time to make your schedules more organized, too. This is the year to truly make use of a planner.

Using a planner helps students visually conceptualize finals early on and allows them to show responsibility by working out solutions for in advance. Test weeks are less likely to crop you up if you have them written down months in advance. You also less likely forget about little assignments if you write them down and look at what each day holds before it arrives. Writing things down helps you be more intentional with your time, allowing you to better balance academics with a social life.

A whole world of difference can happen when students are organized and take the time to visually write down all of your assignments, for example, how meals to the finals is on key.

Eliminate the stigma; embrace y’all

MCKENNA MIDDLTON
Opinion Editor

Although I’ve lived in Texas for the past four years, I still consider myself to be a true Californian, an Angeleno to be exact. I came out to see my Angeleno friends, and consider my stay a trip to be each much read long. While I embrace my Californian culture and consider it to be one aspect of travel from which I adopted immediately using “y’all.”

It’s funny how we’ve stopped using this beloved phrase. I think it’s always considered “y’all” to offer nothing but a grammatical evolution of regional identity, similar to the word “yousir.” And, while I’ve still continued this tradition, I consider this a valid interpretation of “y’all.” I have come to incorporate “y’all” into my daily vocabulary.

The Californian alternative to this phrase is “you guys.” When “y’all” (short for “you all”) has a simple way of turning your sentences into the plural, there are many cases when you would have to completely (in this your case) get.

Needless to say, one reason for allowing “y’all” to step into my otherwise snobbish and dainty style is utility. Y’all simply gets the point across more quickly.

Modern standard English has no simple solution to this dilemma of referring to a second person plural. Some opt to follow the rules I once dabbled by saying “you guys.”

Some opt to never use the pronoun “you” at all, referring to either one person directly or a group, having the plurality of the word “showing the abstract concept.”

And still others, usually those who practice Southern English and Vernacular American English (“AAE”), use “y’all”.

Vane R. Newbrough of the Atlanta Journal-Constitution explains that in old English, such as in the King James Bible, “ye” used serve this purpose such as “Ye are the light of the world.” And using this word is rare to produce some strange looks from your audience, unless they’re from the 300s.

Looking back on it now, I find it hard to justify my long-time resistance to embracing the acronyms, grammatically logical and gender inclusive. But, unfortunately, I had fallen victim to accepting and perpetuating the stigmatization of the word. “Y’all” owes its bad reputation to regional and racial bias against Southern accents and AAE. Just in case, I’ve also made sure to include a wide, sexual accents, and usage of “y’all” has been used to express, anyone, who may speak a different dialect of English, subconsciously accept these harmful words.

A wider acceptance of “y’all” would work to eliminate the social stigmatization of “you guys” as well as the regional and racial implications of “y’all” itself. So, I invite you, whatever gables races or regional identity to completely embrace this second plural person.

The California is a little bit more socially and Westerner from Galveston, Cal.

We use our passion to share yours

MOLLY ATCHISON
Editor-in-Chief

Dear readers,

Thank you for tuning in to the Baylor Lariat. I am tuning in to this piece that I made a point to write and share with you all.

Not only did we continue the move to become a digital-first publication, but we also explored our options in the areas of broadcast, radio and alternative media for us. As the most important task is to reach our audience in the way that are most beneficial to them. That means, looking forward, we will be boosting, hand-tagging and tagging as much as possible so that you can get to your campus magazine outlet at any time.

Allowing everyone to explore the digital universe by reading articles and interacting online, my first love was always print. As print managing color last year, I developed a passion for beautiful designs and aligning front page. This year, I encourage you to explore as we have, exploring our horizons outside of your phone screen. Pick up a copy of the Baylor Lariat on Thursday and Friday, read some of the print-only features we write and enjoy the feel of the dead ink under your hands.

There’s something magic about print, just think about the endless streams of information that we use today. Our writers, editors, designers, photographers, broadcast teams and radio put their heart and soul into Baylor Lariat. Whatever it is that you are passionate about, you will find something to resonate with you. We want you to make your passion known to us. We want you to tell us about your interesting experiences and ideas, and even just random thoughts you’ve. We want you to make your passion known to us. We want to bring you the most factual, important and interesting experiences and ideas, and even just random thoughts you’ve. We want you to make your passion known to us.

So, that’s how I’ve made the decision to continue the move to digital-first publication this year. Maybe you’ve been reading the Lariat since your freshman year at Baylor. Maybe you follow us on Twitter for our friendly rivalry with the TCU Horned Frogs. Maybe you’ve never heard of us before. Hey! But either way, everyone who has traveled, graduated, students, new faculty and staff—we at the Lariat love to bring you new things to see, new people to learn about and new adventures. Sign up for that unique club, take that class that to make the most of every moment you have here on campus.

As you start your new journey, I urge you to share us the details of your journey, but let me make it clear that I can’t promise you anything. Let me make it clear that we don’t follow your course curriculum yet because your interested in it, but we can’t promise you anything. Let me make it clear that we’ll connect you with new friends, make new memories and follow you through your journey. Our student writers and editors will be with you every step of the way, providing you with new places to go, new things to see, new people to learn about and everything else in between.

So, thank you for tuning in, and I hope you continue to do so. Please, keep an eye on our website, our social media, our physical publication, our email and our publications in general at Baylor University. Let me know what you think. I’d love to hear from you.

I wish you the best of luck this coming year, sincerely,

Molly Atchison

Helping Hands

Gettings the Upperclassmen’s Hands: Wardord Juniors, Cameron Zagarlo and Sugar Land Sophomore, Jaylee Rodriguez help move inmates into Texas.
Receiving a line jersey in Independence is just the beginning of many traditions that the upcoming class of 2022 has to look forward to. From attending the first Dr Pepper Hour to seeing Christmas on Fifth Street, there are plenty of Baylor traditions to go around.

The Woodlands junior Maddie Ream said her experience during Baylor’s Welcome Week was slightly overwhelming, but very exciting. “The leaders were amazing and made Baylor less intimidating,” Ream said.

Once Welcome Week is over and classes begin, students have the opportunity to see and join organizations. The Mosaic Mixer, an event hosted by the Department of Cultural Affairs, will take place Wednesday at the Bill Daniel Student Center, with representatives from multicultural student organizations. Late Night, another event hosted by student organizations, is from 9 p.m. to midnight Friday at the locations — The McLane Student Life Center, Russell Gymnasium, the Hub Spiritual Life Center, Moody Library and the SCB. There will be live music, games, exhibitions, free food, prizes and more. These events are open to all students and intended to give students a chance to find their niche on campus.

As August comes to an end, freshmen will finally get to become a part of the Baylor Line. The first football game is Sept. 1 against Abilene Christian University. Though Ream said the Baylor Line can be mass chaos, it was her favorite part of freshman year.

Houston freshman Katelyn Garcia said the class of 2022 is definitely anticipating their participation in the Line. “I feel like the Baylor Line is a very special tradition and that it will really bond us as a class,” Garcia said. “The longest lasting tradition at Baylor is homecoming. Beginning in 1901, the event is recognized as the first collegiate homecoming in the nation. The homecoming activities will begin Nov. 1 and continue through Nov. 3. Some of the main events include alumni reunions, Freshman Mass Meeting, the bonfire, the football game and — perhaps the most recognized — the Homecoming Parade.

Austin freshman Megan Wright said she is excited to meet new people who could become lifelong friends. One of the final traditions during fall semester is Christmas on Fifth Street. The event is set for 5:30 to 10 p.m. on Nov. 29. There will be various activities at different locations, including Fountain Mall, Burleson Quadrangle, Traditions Plaza and the SUB. Some activities include the lighting of the Christmas tree in Burleson Quadrangle, carols, a matinee scene, live music, carving rides and pictures with Santa. This event helps bring the fall semester to a close.

A student-led “tradition” is tortilla tossing. Tortilla tossing is an activity where students or Wacoans take a bag of tortillas to the Waco Suspension Bridge and try to toss the tortillas onto a concrete pillar in the middle of the water. There are a couple of tall tales to tortilla tossing, such as if a student lands a tortilla on the pillar, he or she will graduate in four years. Another tale is that however many tortillas it takes to land on the pillar will tell how many people a person will date before they meet his or her soulmate. Freshmen can choose for themselves which of these tales they choose to believe.

Ream said the class of 2022 has a lot to look forward to, but with all the traditions and festivities can get overwhelming. Ream’s biggest advice for incoming freshmen is to study. “Freshmen should be really passionate and care about grades. Since there is so much you can do freshman year, you forget to study,” Ream said.

She also advises those nervous about participating in traditions to at least do them all once. “The leaders and events can make Baylor less intimidating, and trying them once will allow a student find what he or she likes.”

Camp on Wheels

Students hit road for twist on traditional campus experience

JASON PEDEREROS

Most people have heard of the traditional on-campus game: Go to campus for a week, meet your crazy counselor, make new friends and have an actual life. This summer, Baylor students returned out of the country to be counselors and leaders at top summer camps. Some students even got the opportunity to take their camp experiences on the road.

Pine Cove Christian Camps, the nation’s largest camp organization, has “Wheels” called Camp in the City. The organization has spread out—four in Tyler and four in Columbus.

One of the eight teams is Travelin’ Bears led by Student alum Garrett “하실 Merv” Ward. College students or counselors got to set up and run activities with their camps in addition to leading them.

“Camp in the City is a partnership between the local church and Pine Cove that enable the kids to get a lot much out to their community and get a chance to reach their local church,” Ward said. “You get to see the impact you loss on campers in the ways that you would as well as travel to a different city each week to share the gospel message with your communities. God is good and I love this ministry.”

Pine Cove has a lot of “Wheels” — one of which is the use of camp names. Camp names are said to be down scaled with children and to make first impressions between counselors and campers more incredible and fun. For a camp mate taking place in Columbus, a staff got called during the “Shine Game” and was asked any question posed by a counselor. According to Katy junior Daniela “Soh No” Icther, said campcounselers are filled with embarrassing answers from the backracks.

Assistant Kate “Cookin’ Mama” Norman explained that you get to see some simple question. “I literally got asked one question,” Norman said. ‘They asked me what my favorite game was and I said ‘I like Minecraft.’” According to Katy junior Daniela “Soh No” Icther, said campcounselers are filled with embarrassing answers from the backracks.

“The torch that you are carrying matters, and to serve those around her. "Camp in the City," Ward said waking up every morning at 6 a.m. and playing with kids until 5 p.m. for 5 weeks in a row.

"'The joy of the Lord is our strength," Ward said waking up every morning at 6 a.m. and playing with kids until 5 p.m. for 5 weeks in a row.

"We can only take it so far on our own. Encouragement from others can go a long way as well."

Starting this fall, Baylor has joined schools such as the University of Texas in exchanging traditional master’s occupational therapy programs for doctor level degrees.

Including certifications of Occupational Therapy has become the newest wave for PT programs, according to The American Occupational Therapy Association (AOTA).

Baylor is now the third university in Texas to offer a doctoral program for Occupational Therapy.

The Baylor University Post-Professional Doctor of Occupational Therapy (OPT Program) aims to prepare licensed Occupational Therapists to further their professional development. It provides the graduates the tools they need to provide the best care possible and to work within a multidisciplinary environment.

"I really want to go back to the university in an impactful way," Capilli said. "I’ve loved being a part of some of our brightest kids on campus." Capilli said she was specifically drawn to Student Foundation for its role in helping a variety of campus trips. The hope is that the organization will be able to impact and learn from the Baylor students as well.

"In membership is so influential and willing to get it with prospective students, current students and alumni," Capilli said. "We just came back from a conference in Kentucky and learned from organizations from across the nation. Being able to get ideas from other Baylor organizations will only make us better." Capilli said the organization's goal is to "empower and engage students" and "connect students to the unique experiences through meaningful involvement," according to Student Activities.

"We are always looking for opportunities to get involved in different events," Capilli said. "They can really help you find what you are passionate about and find opportunities to further your education." Capilli said she could not recommend the program enough.

Fundraising illuminates Baylor's support system

MOLLY ATCHISON

Baylor announced it raised its second-largest amount of money in history earlier this summer. Totaling more than $113 million, in a Baylor Media Communications brief the university recognized this fundraising effort which stated that “the generosity of the Baylor Family will impact students, faculty and a diversity of programs across campus and reflect a depth of engagement by students, alumni, parents and friends giving at all levels for the future of the institution.”

This momentous occasion marked the end of the 2017 fiscal year, and with it, the end of Dr. Linda Livingstone’s first year as Baylor’s president. According to the brief, alumni, family and friends were among those who donated to Baylor in hopes of growing the boundaries of the university’s educational experiences — for both current and future students.

These endowments and donations have come in all shapes and sizes and are spread out to reach in many parts of Baylor as possible.

“This financial support is invaluable to strengthening Baylor as a place of transformational education for our students and a source of transformational change to our surrounding world,” Livingstone said in the brief.

This is clear to see with several significant endowments from alumni and Baylor supporters. A notable donation spurred the creation of the Lynda and Robert Copple Endowed Chair in Christian School Leadership. According to the newsletter, this gift is meant to attract prestigious speakers and researchers from Christian teaching communities in an attempt to lay academic foundations for the Center for Christian Education.

about whether the 10 Jane Doe plaintiffs were sexually assaulted, whether Baylor responded with deliberate indifference to their alleged assaults, if female students before them were misreported such that a “known risk” of sexual assault was created and whether any such “known risk” is a result of the plaintiff’s alleged assaults.

Baylor has not yet responded to a request for comment from The Baylor Lariat about the suit. Jim Dunnam, plaintiff attorney, said the motion is an attempt from Baylor to conceal information and shield itself from answering questions they don’t want to answer.

“This is in a distinct manner,” Dunnam said. “Baylor has been showing how grossly incorrect this lawsuit is. I think Baylor has admitted to failing to implement Title IX. He said he can’t answer how they failed or who specifically failed.

“Baylor doesn’t want to tell us how they failed to implement Title IX, how they failed to protect students or who is responsible for those failures,” Dunnam said.

Ian McCaw

This July, former Baylor Athletics Director Ian McCaw accused Baylor’s campus police and former football coach Art Briles of failing to implement Title IX, how they failed to protect students or who is responsible for those failures.

Ian McCaw, tone athletic director at Liberty University, was deposed as part of a deferred Title IX discrimination lawsuit looking into Baylor’s response to reports of sexual violence.

McCaw accused the Board of Regents of being naive and releasing a “paper report” in 2016 regarding Baylor’s response to sexual violations.

As a press conference following the Board of Regents meeting in July, chairman Jeff Allen said he has not seen any facts that support those accounts.

The university said it is confident in the changes made following the Pepper Hamilton investigations and in the university’s current leadership.

“The underlying situation of what happened at Baylor is quite simple. Two high-profile cases led the Baylor Board of Regents to launch an investigation and in the university’s current leadership. Investigations

The Department of Education, the Office of Civil Rights, the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA), the Big 12 and the Texas Rangers are currently investigating Baylor.

In July, Livingstone said that Baylor is cooperating fully with all investigations.

With plenty of endowments that supported specific purposes in the Baylor community, and a senior class gift totaling at $12,380 to benefit the university, the general consensus is that the Baylor community’s financial involvement is at an all-time high. With alumni donation rates rising to 27 percent this year, and the amount of corporates gifts matching that with an increase of 18 percent, Baylor’s fundraising goals are on an upwards trend as well.

More than 19,000 donors chose to come alongside Baylor this past year as we pursue our aspiration to become a pre-eminent Christian research university.”

WHAT’S NEW, WACO?

Students may have taken a break over the summer, but emerging entrepreneurs in Waco did not. Here are some of the creative places that weren’t here when school let out in May.

Fabled Bookstore

Kimberly Batson, co-owner of Common Grounds, and Alison Frenzel are in the process of starting a bookshop/café combo. Their location, which is currently under construction, will be at 220 S 4th St, in the building that has the “Wacotown” mural on the side.

“Ideally, a bookshop is where everyone can be welcome and accepted… We’ll have open seating for the café, we’ll have cozy nooks for people who want to stay and eat and write, and we’ll have couches for people who want to linger,” Batson said. Batson and Frenzel intend Fabled to be a hub of culture and events.

“People not only come here for the food, but they come here for the culture, to savor a book,” Batson said. “The new bookstore in Waco that’s cultivating that experience.”

Milo All Day

Milo has made a name for itself through events and its well-known food truck, popular for its one-of-a-kind food selections. Now Corey and Lauren McEntryre opened the restaurant, Milo All Day in mid-May.

“Because Corey is from Georgia, there is always a lean toward southern food. However, we prioritize seasonal, fun food. Really, it’s whatever the kitchen is inspired to do. It’s in eclectic and local and seasonal. The menu rotates so you get something Tuesday and you can’t get it Saturday,” Lauren said.

“But because Milo All Day is not open on Tuesdays. It’s Milo’s version of Chick-fil-a’s Sunday. The kitchen is inspired and breaks the mold to Waco, where McEntryre had graduated from Texas A&M in 2009, with their vision for Milo already in mind.

“We chose Waco because there was a hole. We wanted to inspire some taste buds… I was excited to come back and see the new Waco because it wasn’t like this when I graduated,” Lauren said.

Rush Cycle

Madison and Chris Goss held the grand opening of Rush Cycle, a California-based spin class franchise, on Aug. 11 and have been holding their grand opening classes all week.

“As instructors, we have our own flair, “ Rachel Taylor, an instructor for Rush Cycle, said. “We choose our own music and classes, but they all have close to the same moves.”

The spin classes are a 45-minute, full-body workout and include the cardio workout of indoor cycling as well as arm and core exercises. Rush brings a lot of health and fitness to the community in a fun manner. "We can let loose to the music and have fun while doing something difficult together,” Taylor said.

Rush Cycle is located downtown at 300 S 2nd St.

These businesses and more are popping up all around the Waco area. Pokey O’s which just announced the opening of a new permanent storefront, the location of which they have not yet disclosed to the public. Linen and Cake, a new home decor shop opened this summer at 714 Austin Avenue.

Waco Family continues to support the community and students

Strolling to be the most unique grocery experience in Central Texas, family-owned Waco Custom Marketplace is a one-stop shop for locals looking to shop smart and become part of a family.

With most products either being made in-house or coming from other family-run businesses in Texas, Waco Custom Marketplace promises quality and the local community.

“We’re just passionate about taking care of the people in Waco that want to shop local,” said Brian Bauer, Baylor graduate and vice president of Waco Custom Market and Waco Custom Marketplace.

The marketplace opened up its doors on 425 Lake Air Drive in March 2018. After acquiring the space previously occupied by Yoga Chasers, Waco Custom Marketplace jumped around a year’s worth of major renovation.

Last year, the Waco Tribune-Herald reported that the upcoming business had “knocked down everything but one wall,” and basically started with “just a concrete floor.”

On that concrete floor rose an intimate space that somehow captures the essence of a bustling marketplace. White walls are accentuated with black tiles, wooden panel accents and canvases with word art. Hanging high on black and white photographs of the Bauer family who began Hill Packing in Waco in 1940, establishing the family business that is upheld today.

After immigrating to Waco from France, where they owned a meat market, that is what the Bauer family has done. Hill Packing during World War II. Hill Packing was the oldest running family-owned and operated cattle processing facility in Texas. Bauer said.

In addition to offering a special, holistic grocery experience to Waco.

"Just creating this place, that’s what we really strive to do — is a huge part of the Waco people,” Bauer said.

Dry goods occupy the center of the store, nestled within wooden display structures. A produce desk and bakery reside in the corners of the space, each with glass display cases presenting products ranging from fresh fish to same-day baked goods. Included in their display are daily in-house creations such as jam, cupcakes, cake shots, custom cakes and huge creations such as jumbo cupcakes, the best meal plan on campus

"You’re money is going to stay here in Waco and even has a student discount. I’m really excited about that."

Waco Custom Marketplace produces themed, pre-organized boxes of goods that have ranged from a Fourth of July box for the summer to a tailgate box for football season and just mix in various meats and dry goods.

"I’ve sold that’s like a small box will include charcuterie [and] gouda cheese and a bag of chips if you want," Bauer said.

Clarified by the spirit of the family business, Waco Custom Marketplace is always looking toward the future. Bauer said they will always invite community members to join the family whether through hiring or shopping and that whenever it’s possible to eventually offer delivery service in the future.

"Will be ever-changing," Bauer said. "That’s my goal."

The Waco Parks and Recreation Department are hosting Cameron Park Wild Wednesdays through the end of August. Each Wednesday participants congregate at 6 p.m. at the Redwood Shelter in Cameron park for an hour-long hike.

Cameron Park, a popular area for locals and students, is about a 10-minute drive from campus and features a complex trail system, picnics and event areas and a disc golf course.

Arianna Jacinto, Waco park ranger, guided her swim in for the outdoors in Kalispell, Alaska. After coming to Waco to attend Baylor, Jacinto interned with the Waco Park Rangers and created Cameron Park Wild Wednesdays. She later became a full-time park ranger and now leads the hiking group every Wednesday.

“The hike is an hour-long guided hike in the trails of Cameron Park,” Jacinto said. “I created this hike series last summer as a part of my internship and it ended up being pretty popular so we decided to try it again this summer.”

The size of the group varies from week to week, Jacinto said. “A core group of frequent hikers, mostly attendees can be anywhere from 2 to 20 hikers depending on the week.”

Regulation of size, the park rangers and Waco Parks and Recreation are always eager to engage with the Waco community.

Gatesville native Mary Alapopoulos participates in Cameron Park Wild Wednesdays. Hiking with Jacinto and others helped her familiarize herself with the trail and learn more about the park, sustainability and more.

“I enjoyed meeting the others and talking with them on the hike,” Alapopoulos said. “I feel it is important to participate in city programs because of the time and resources it takes for the city to put on events for the local citizens to enjoy.”

The Waco Park Rangers have several upcoming events and series for the fall including: hikes on Tuesdays and Thursdays at 12:00 p.m. and another session of the Junior Ranger Program, Jacinto said.

Kim Jennings, the City of Waco park ranger supervisor, directs most of the ranger activities including Wild Wednesdays. In her view, engaging with the public and answering questions is to utilize parks is a priority for the rangers.

“We do want to connect with the public,” Jennings said. “We want to show them how to use the parks properly if they have any questions about where they can go, what they can do or can’t. We want to serve as a liaison between the department and between the different park users.”

Jacinto encourages Baylor students to attend Wild Wednesdays and other events off-campus.

“It’s a great way to meet members of the community and see what Waco is really like outside of campus life,” Jacinto said.

This year marks the 40th anniversary of Welcome Week. The week brought back old activities like an all-student candlelight ceremony, as well as new ones like a picture of the entire freshman class at McLane Stadium.

The entire incoming class gathered in McLane for a group photo, a special memory that will hopefully remain for years to come.

“The hope is that it will become a staple of Welcome Week,” Shelburne said. “We plan to highlight that as a signature moment for the incoming class.”

Along with existing activities and traditions, one of the most important parts of Welcome Week involves the leaders, who go through extensive training to lead small groups and welcome the freshmen to their new homes.

Cupertino senior Jacob Kehoe said his experience as a Welcome Week leader last year impacted him greatly, because he was able to see how important the leaders were to the incoming class.

“You’re expected to be someone that incoming freshmen can come to with all of their questions about Baylor,” Kehoe said. “You’re a representation of the school itself once you’re one of their first impressions of college.”

Small groups are intended to help students open up about beginning a new chapter of their lives and grow meaningful bonds with students who will live in their future residence halls.

“You have the opportunity to make really intimate friendships with the people in your group and truly get to know them,” Kehoe said. “I keep in contact with all the guys from my group, and we have a GroupMe where we talk and schedule occasional lunches.”

Shelburne said. “We plan to highlight that as a signature moment hard to put on. It’s simple, but the best advice is to lay yourself present and be willing to ask questions and get to know other students,” Shelburne said.

Kehoe agrees, noting how forming friendships at Baylor can make a huge impact on the Welcome Week experience.

“You’re expected to be someone that incoming freshmen can come to with all of their questions about Baylor,” Kehoe said. “There’s so much potential if you really plug yourself in to Welcome Week and life at Baylor!”

New Student Programs states on the First in Line webpage that the main goals of the week are to “foster belonging and excitement for new students” and “inspire them to take ownership of their unique Baylor story.”

Baylor volleyball continues climb to peak of the Big 12

CLIMBING THE LADDER Junior middle blocker Shelley Fannin provides pep talks to the ball against Texas on Nov. 25, 2017 at the Ferrell Center. The Bears lost 1-3 and finished second in the conference behind the Longhorns. This year, Baylor has their eyes set on de-throning Texas and taking home a Big 12 Championship.

Senior forward Ariel Leach protects the ball against a Sam Houston State player in the exhibition game on Aug. 10. Baylor and SHSU tied the scrimmage 1-1. The Bears won their opening match Thursday night against Abilene Christian 2-0 at WAC. McGUIRE said the rotation will be tricky to figure out given the level of talent at each position.

"Well both did a good job," Jobson said. "They both had to make a lot of easy saves. We're excited about that, so every save was big time. It keeps the game in the game, so I was proud of what they did. They both did a great job.

The Bears took Sam Houston State University 1-1 in an exhibition game on Aug. 10, where they had more opportunity to take the win but were unable to capitalize. Jobson knows that with this first scrimmage was only the beginning of the season for Baylor, it's also about finding what kind of team the Bears will be and allowing the players to get into the game and start putting on the basis the team should to be successful.

"This year, we're just looking for making sure we are true to our identity, of being a team that works harder than any other team," Jobson said. "We're also looking to go into the season for Johnson was communications as well as being a 10 team.

When it came to the pretournament, Jobson said the team started to pick up and where they left off last season even though it seemed like it might take a while to find out what they really are.

"Fortunately this group came in prepared," Jobson said. "So we saw the potential for the state is where the games are, even in our first meeting we don't want to know who we are and after that next day we really started to figure out who we were." Going into the start of the season, finding the chemistry of the team is not the only thing the Bears look for. Crowther said it's important to find that chemistry but also to find out how the team functions, is mentally and what their thought process is so early on.

"I want to find out what thing that we definitely want to see," Crowther said. "That we can find a mix of each and every to work well together. We have a young team, but it's OK because by the end of two we should have a mix of every. We do have more question marks of all the time I've been here, so we're excited to see how it goes and get it done," Jobson said.

"We don't really know what the season is going to look like. But we've also excited because we like two or three players of these. We've a young team, but it's OK, it's fine because by the end of two days we should be up and playing together and we've been up as a team."

The Bears faced Samford on Sunday at Betty Lou Mays Field in Waco. Baylor will be back in action against Southern at Florida 6 p.m. on Friday in Tampa, Fla.

KEEP AWAY Senior forward Ariel Leach protects the ball against a Sam Houston State player in the exhibition game on Aug. 10, Waco. Baylor and SHSU tied the scrimmage 1-1. The Bears won their opening match Thursday night against Abilene Christian 2-0.

"I feel like especially my first year here and my sophomore year, said the team is not dwelling on the past.

In the scrimmage against [SHSU], Jobson said his team got a lot of strong, encouraging start but he also said he was excited about finding the chemistry of the team will still be ready to figure out how. mentor who was going to jump in and help. "I think it was really a good effort for us and we saw some really good things," Jobson said. "We've made some partnerships starting to work with some of our young players and veterans, and we're really feeling good about that."

Basketball graduates shoot for a chance at the professional level

A successful 2017-18 season for Baylor men’s basketball ended with a tough second-round INT loss to the Mississippi State in the NCAA Tournament. But the guards from that team are already on track to continue their basketball careers at the professional level.

Former Baylor senior guard Makai Mitchell, who started all 38 games in 2017-18, has been a member of the Kansas City Legends in the American Basketball Association. Mitchell averaged 15.5 points and 10.5 rebounds while shooting 13-for-23 from the field.

The Lady Bears have a break before remaining practices in September to prepare for their first game against the Langston Lions on Oct. 26 at the Ferrell Center.

Baylor awaits finalization on Big 12 revenue status

Money that was withheld may be returned if Baylor clears inspection

ADAM GIBSON
Sports Writer

Baylor University is making progress to gain back funding currently being withheld from the university until a review of requirements is complete. University president Linda Livingstone announced that Baylor is fully cooperating with the Big 12 in every aspect in order to receive finances from the conference.

Baylor hired Pepper Hamilton law firm in 2015 to do an independent investigation on sexual assault on and around Baylor's campus and came up with 105 recommendations for the university to implement, in order to gain back some of its standing. The scandal resulted in former university president Ken Starr, former athletic director Ian McCaw and former head football coach Art Briles leaving the university.

The Big 12 Conference, since the investigation, has withheld 25 percent of Baylor's revenue until the Pepper Hamilton recommendations are fulfilled and reviewed.

Big 12 Commissioner Bob Bowlsby told the Associated Press that Baylor has made significant progress so far and the process can continue moving forward.

"Baylor's done a tremendous job of responding to everything we've asked for," Bowlsby said. "I think we'll like to move ahead as efficiently and as soon as we possibly can."

At a press conference following Baylor’s Board of Regents meeting in May, Livingstone said the balance the university is all continuing to work on to get it done. She indicated that she is also optimistic that the recommendations will get the job done. She also said that she believes the university will continue working alongside the Big 12 to make sure everything goes right and that the Big 12 will get the job done.

"In the near future, in general that's how Bowlsby indicated it, and that's certainly our understanding as well as so we are working with them and certainly very hopeful that that will be resolved in the not too distant future," Livingstone said.

The Big 12 Conference announced in its Big 12 business meeting that it recorded a record $365 million in revenue. The 25 percent withheld from Baylor could be about $9 million this year, although West Virginia University president and chairman of the league’s board of directors E. Gordon Gee made it known this was not something made to punish and hurt Baylor.

"This wasn't about punishment. It was about all of us together working on the progress for one institution that will be helpful to all of us," Gee said. "I say this again, I just felt the system was a failure to help anybody, as it is the victim." Gee said.

Bennett is now taking a year off from coaching football after one season with the Arizona State Sun Devils.

McCaw, current athletic director for Liberty University, claimed the university commenced "an elaborate plan that essentially scapegoated black football players and the football program for being responsible for what was a decades-long, university-wide sexual assault scandal," in a deposition as part of a Title IX lawsuit against the university on July 20.

In May 2017 Baylor announced the completion of the 105 recommendations from Pepper Hamilton and is working to regain its funding from the Big 12 Conference, which it has been a part of since the conference's inception in 1997.

GROWTH
President Livingstone recently spoke with the Board of Regents this past summer, discussing Baylor's objectives and projected goals to gain the lessons that can be taken from the sexual assault issues.

Rhule, Bears taking rebuild one step at a time

ADAM GIBSON
Sports Writer

After a disappointing 1-11 season last year, Matt Rhule and the Bears have their eyes set on learning from the past season to make improvements going into the 2018 season.

Rhule, accompanied by senior quarterback Bryce Petty, senior safety Chris Banoglu, and junior running back Taron Stickney, discussed where the program is headed heading into the 2018 season.

“We found a way to lose a bunch of close ballgames. We did not learn from that. There were some games where we could have won, but we didn’t.”

“The Bears had several games that were close losses, including two losses within three points at home against Liberty and West Virginia. Even though the previous season was mostly disappointing, the Bears have experienced something similar in other years.

Rhule also had praise for the quarterback, how he came to start as a freshman and will remain as a player the coaches continue to develop.

SEC mentality

New Baylor wide receiver Jalen Hurd made a decision that will most likely cost him millions of dollars in the short run.

Hurd, previously a running back for Tennessee, announced his decision to leave the Volunteers’ program on Nov. 7, 2016, after a tumultuous stretch of games in his junior season.

Hurd was projected to be a first-round pick in the 2017 NFL Draft as a running back after a stint in Knoxville. Tennessee’s new head coach over his first two years at Tennessee with a total of 21 touchdowns.

Instead of opting for the draft and a career as a running back, Hurd made a life-changing decision. He would switch to wide receiver.

“The biggest reason, according to Hurd, is the physical toll on the body.

“His body was not really looking that well so running back,” Hurd told reporters at a Baylor spring practice. “I had a lot of injuries at Tennessee. The switch has been great for me to reset my body. I’ll be able to play a lot longer I think to be honest.”

Hurd wasn’t just thinking about his college career, he was looking toward a professional career in football.

“I didn’t just do this on a whim, I researched it,” Hurd told Bleacher Report. “Running backs last 2-3 years in the NFL. Wide receivers can last 10 or more years. Receivers are more valuable than running backs in the NFL, and I can play this game a lot longer and catch more valuable as a receiver. It’s not just a position and career change, it’s a life change.”

In order to delineate his position change, Hurd needed to transfer schools and show NFL scouts his competency at the wide receiver positions during his final year of college eligibility.

Hurd said he took his time to learn the wide receiver position before looking at transfer options.

“Transition has been going really well,” Hurd said. “I had time after I stopped playing for a bit to really focus on receiver and get that mentality and kind of learn the position a bit better.”

On April 22, 2017, Hurd announced his decision to join the Baylor football team. Hurd said the new coaching staff at Baylor drew him to Waco with their no-minimum management style.

“I saw a great opportunity.” Hurd said. “I liked what Rhule was doing here. I saw that I could do really well here and he has a great decision so far. They’re straight up. They’re their straight up with me since I signed on campus. That’s what you want as a player. They ran a strict ship here when I visited.”

One to SEC schools transfer rules, Hurd was forced to sit out a year before showing his new football identity as a wide receiver.

Hurd, who spent the 2017 season on Baylor’s scout team, and he hid his time by learning the ins and outs of his new position.

“It was humbling.” Hurd said. “I came here and saw the same teas every single day. It was humbling but I was learning the game. I was learning how to move back and out of my run. I was learning working on my hands and everything like that, doing the transition.”

Despite minimal practice on the perimeter of the football field, Hurd had coach Matt Rhule’s support in his transition.

“He’s going to play a long time in the NFL as a wide receiver,” Hurd told Bleacher Report. “He will be an elite wide receiver.”

Hurd landed as a starting inside receiver in the Bears’ personnel depth chart along with wide receivers Chris Platt and Denzel Mims.

The Bears, coming off of a one-win season in Rhule’s first year, hardship to put Baylor back on the map.

Once projected as a first-round pick running back with potentially millions of dollars to his name, Hurd now must prove his worth as a wide receiver.

“Baylor is reinventing itself; I’m reinventing myself.” Hurd told Bleacher Report. “We both have a lot to prove.”

2. Denzel Mims | WR | Junior
3. Jalen Hurd | WR | Senior
4. Clay Johnston | LB | Junior
5. Grayland Arnold | CB | Junior

The former SEC running back will bring more than just experience. Hurd is an explosive athlete who is making the transition to the perimeter after three years in the backfield at Tennessee.

For a defense that gave up plenty of yardage last year, Johnston stood out as a bright spot. Johnston recorded 44 tackles in just eight games before breaking his hand and sitting the rest of the season.

Make friends, stay fit with Baylor club sports

Baylor Club Sports offers 26 sports for students to participate in. Clubs range from rugby to water polo to golf and more. Practice times, tryout dates, club dues and contact information can be found online.

More information >> baylor.edu/clubsports

Students can also chat with members of club sports teams from 9 p.m. to midnight Friday at Late Night, a club fair held across campus.

TENNIS: Club tennis meets twice a week to practice at the Hurd Tennis Facility. The co-ed club is open to participants of all skill levels.

CREW: Ali Garza, a recent Baylor graduate, pushes the boat off the dock in preparation to race at the Head of the Colorado Regattas, known as Pumpkinhead, on Oct. 28, 2017. Crew practices five days a week and members do not need to have previous experience to join.

SOCCER: Houston senior Jorge Mario Aranda practices corner kicks during practice in October 2017. Men and women’s club soccer will hold tryouts Tuesday through Thursday the first week of classes fall semester at the Baylor Intramural Fields. Practices are held three days a week.

FENCING: Houston senior Alex Geithler lunges towards his opponent, scoring a point at a practice in August 2017. Fencing, a co-ed club, meets three times a week and members do not need to have previous experience to join.
